Chan Centre for the Performing Arts and Musqueam Celebrate
5th Edition of Award-Winning Indigenous Arts Festival:
— ʔəmi ce:p xʷiwəl – Come Toward the Fire —

Annual festival at UBC extends to three days with new Day of Knowledge Sharing joining Indigenous-led lineup of live performances and cultural activations

VANCOUVER, BC – The Chan Centre for the Performing Arts and Musqueam present the 5th annual ʔəmi ce:p xʷiwəl – Come Toward the Fire Festival, a soul-stirring celebration of Indigenous cultures, creativity, and community, from September 18-20, 2026 at the Chan Centre and venues across the UBC campus, on unceded Musqueam territory.

Named BC Live's 2025 Festival of the Year, this year's ʔəmi ce:p xʷiwəl – Come Toward the Fire reaches a new milestone with its most expansive edition yet — growing to three days for the first time and adding a dedicated Day of Knowledge Sharing to a weekend program of live music, dance, film, storytelling, and an Indigenous artisan market. Presented with support from the Gord Downie & Chanie Wenjack Fund (DWF), and programmed by the Chan Centre's Head Curator Jarrett Martineau (nêhiyaw/Denesūline), the 2026 edition welcomes the Vancouver debuts of rising Indigenous performers LOV, Siibii, and Kalyn Fay, alongside a headlining concert hosted by acclaimed actor, comedian, and activist Dallas Goldtooth, star of the hit series Reservation Dogs.

"ʔəmi ce:p xʷiwəl – Come Toward the Fire is a gathering place — a space where Indigenous Peoples, families, and performers come together in a spirit of deep sharing with the many communities that call this place home," says Martineau. "This year, that spirit grows. The addition of a Day of Knowledge Sharing reflects what this festival has always believed: that joy, learning, and cultural vitality are inseparable."

Inaugurated in 2022, the festival's name was gifted by Musqueam elder and language keeper Larry Grant, with special thanks to Musqueam artist Christie Lee Charles. With an aim to amplify Indigenous voices and create a vibrant space to celebrate Indigenous creativity, brilliance, and culture, the name suggests a movement of returning Indigenous voices to the forefront, back to the heart of the community.

The festival begins Friday, September 18 with a free Day of Knowledge Sharing from 12:30-4:30pm with an opening welcome from Musqueam, special performances by Coastal Wolf Pack and Cree/Metis folk trio Burnstick, followed by workshops, cultural tours, film screenings, video art, an Indigenous artisan market, artist roundtables and learning discussions at venues across the UBC campus. Participating venues include the Chan Centre, Museum of Anthropology, Belkin Gallery, UBC First Nations House of Learning, and the UBC Indian Residential School History and Dialogue Centre. Local DWF legacy schools will be joining and all members of the public are invited to attend.

The festival continues Saturday, September 19 with a full day of family-friendly programming at outdoor and indoor venues at the Chan Centre from 12-6pm, featuring live music, dance, DJs, film screenings, including a screening of Gord Downie's The Secret Path, hands-on workshops, storytellers and authors, food trucks, an Indigenous artisan market, skateboarding, live mural painting, and more. Admission by donation / pay what you can with wristband purchase.

The daytime performance lineup, on Saturday, September 19, features the Vancouver debuts of Cree neosoul/R&B artist and rising TikTok star LOV, who recently released her debut album, Iskwew, and Cherokee/Muscogee folk/Americana artist Kayln Fay, who will be performing from their recently released third album, Garden. The lineup also includes Burnstick, Francis Baptiste, Caley Watts, Gamksimoon, Curtis Clear Sky and the Constellationz, Joey Stylez, Semiah, and Eagle Ex Machina.

The festival will close on Sunday, September 20 with an exuberant mainstage concert at the Chan Centre, from 6-9pm, hosted by Dakota/Diné actor, comedian, and activist Dallas Goldtooth, widely known for his role in Reservation Dogs, and headlined by two-time JUNO Award-winning Oji-Cree singer-songwriter Aysanabee. The ticketed concert will also feature Boslen, Logan Staats, Miss Christie Lee, Coastal Wolf Pack, and the Vancouver debut of Cree pop singer Siibii.

"Musqueam is honoured to continue our partnership with The Chan Centre for the Performing Arts as we welcome the return of ʔə́m̓i ce:p xʷiwəl – Come Toward the Fire," says Musqueam Chief Wayne Sparrow. "As the host Nation, it is deeply meaningful for us to support a gathering that celebrates Indigenous creativity, storytelling, and the living cultures of Indigenous Peoples from across these lands. This festival creates space for Indigenous voices to be seen, heard, and celebrated. We thank the Chan Centre for their continued commitment to this partnership and for helping create opportunities for cultural exchange, learning, and connection for all who attend."
